Mark Sincevich, the founder of Staash Press, believes in the power of photography and its ability to increase creativity and awareness. Photography can increase creativity and awareness by asking us to ponder the deeper meanings behind a photograph. Mark has been practicing photography for over 21 years and specializes in architectural, editorial, event photojournalism and travel photography. His museum-quality fine art photographs have been sold to collectors all over the world. A self-taught photographer, he has studied with many professionals including a few from the National Geographic Society. Mark was an official photographer at President George W. Bush's Second Inauguration and his customers include Fortune 1000 companies, government agencies, associations and individuals wanting to improve their photography. He is frequently quoted in the media and his articles and photography have appeared in newspapers and magazines around the country. Mark is an instructor at the Washington School of Photography (WSP), a member of the American Society of Media Photographers (ASMP) and a member of the National Speakers Association (NSA). Through his photography expertise, he brings a unique angle to his professional speaking programs on photography, creativity and work/life balance. When he isn't speaking professionally or taking photographs, he can be found spending time with his family or writing in coffee shops with character.

"I was impressed that Mark not only wanted to help us with our photographs, but he wanted to help me craft a cohesive marketing message ... I highly recommend Mark to anyone who is interested in a photographer that is highly professional, fits extremely well into a corporate or business setting, takes incredible photographs, and works with his customers to ensure a mutually-beneficial relationship."
